In moments of self-doubt, I often questioned who I could be of use to, especially when it came to my parents. It seemed to me that I was the one burdening them rather than being a source of support. As for my brother, I worried that my physical limitations might hinder his activities and projects. When it came to my relatives, I couldn't help but wonder if they viewed me as a constant reminder of the challenges my parents faced and held them accountable. Prici appeared to care about my happiness, but I wasn't entirely certain of her true intentions. On the other hand, Pradeep genuinely cared about me, but I couldn't shake the thought that his presence in my life might not be permanent. As for Sai, I concluded that there was no way or possibility of her being there for me, which left me feeling worthless and insignificant.
